The Age of Empire. Again?

Globalisation/internationalisation/transnational law/foreign legal systems

• the drive towards greater international and foreign content in legal education has, ..., pursued its course apparently unabated. Opportunities have seemingly been grabbed as they arose (a faculty member happens to be trained in a foreign legal system, a foreign university is willing to welcome our students, a donor fancies student internships in certain international organizations, etc.) with little attention being paid to whether and how they might fit into some overall, consistent pedagogical vision (Valcke 2005)
Which universities have the most students enrolled overseas?

China

you must know the different attitudes towards Western influence in the 19th century, the often mentioned distinction between li and fa and the basic reluctance in Confusianism to accept a binding law or enforcement by legal rules. And you must understand the impact in China still from traditional Chinese thinking. The Chinese like poetry and calligraphy and painting and money-basically they do like these activities better than law and lawyers ... even if on the surface it may appear different. (Ditley Tamm ‘From a European to a Global Approach: Reflections on the Position of Comparative Law in Legal Education’ (2011) 8 US-China Law Review 56)
India

• You must know about the Vedas, dharmasastras and the law of Manu, you must know of Islam and Hindu law and you must know something of modern Indian history, the British Raj, times of Gandhi and Nehru, the constitution and the basic principle of secularity in order to understand the law of a billion people. And it is very illustrating to understand the role of Great Britains like Thomas Macauley in the making of a specific Indian colonial law. And I think knowledge of a case as the Shah Bano case on the tension between Indian law and Muslim law is very illustrative of Indian society (Ditley Tamm ‘From a European to a Global Approach: Reflections on the Position of Comparative Law in Legal Education’ (2011) 8 US-China Law Review 56)
The legal flag of empire?

- Singapore
  - English common law via British East India Co (and now Application of English Law Act 1993) + other common law influences (Australia/NZ/etc)
  - English & Chinese, Malay and Tamil
  - Chinese, Malay and Hindu law (eg Administration of Muslim Law Act 1966)
  - Law School of Singapore + recognised others
Cyprus

• Historically Islamic laws, Turkish and Greek law, and French law

Whither the comparative law scholar?

• ‘even if either civil law or common law seems to have conquered the world, there are many cultural differences which the lawyer should know in order to understand how the law functions in various countries’ (Tamm)

• ‘the paucity of institutional reflection on comparative law teaching ....stems, at least in part, from an increased acceptance of the model of the law student as consumer. Not only is this model conceptually consistent with the globalization of the market for legal services ... but the timing of the recent flurry of international and comparative offerings in these schools raises doubts about the possibility of their having been brought about for non-consumerist, pedagogical reasons.’ (Valke)
Each law subject must account for three aspects of internationalization:

a) evolution of municipal law to account for the new realities of globalization;

a) comparison of specific areas of law in different legal systems; and

b) the extent to which global developments are driving us towards harmonization and a convergence of legal systems, and in some cases, perhaps an international system of governance. (Barker)
